

Global procurement

The Global Procurement Graduate Programme is a 2-year programme anchored in Copenhagen, Denmark. The Global Procurement Graduate track provides you the opportunity to understand many parts of our core business and build comprehensive knowledge of our procurement value chain and sourcing functions. The programme has been designed to develop the next generation of procurement leaders who will drive business performance and shareholder return while making a difference to the millions of people who rely on our products.

What is it about?

In Novo Nordisk, Global Procurement is responsible for sourcing and purchasing billions worth of services and materials across the business. Our responsibilities include establishing and anchoring supplier strategies, negotiating contracts, identifying sourcing needs, driving the sourcing and procurement process, managing stakeholder and supplier relationships.

In addition, Global Procurement supports the organisation by prioritising key business activities with the aim of achieving the highest possible total supply chain value, while taking quality, risks, savings, environmental and social aspects into consideration.

What's in it for me?

Working at Novo Nordisk you will have the opportunity to make a significant difference to patients and society while also delivering exciting results from a business perspective.

During the 2-year programme you will undertake 4 rotations: You will work in different departments in our corporate headquarters in Denmark and for 1-2 rotations you will rotate internationally into our affiliates or production sites located around the globe.

Additionally, you will receive formal training and gain knowledge and invaluable international experience leading to both professional and personal development. You will develop core skills in areas such as supply strategy, contract negotiation, financial planning, procurement systems, change management, etc.
